FOREWORD

The 1988 General Election witnessed Delaware voters making their fifty-first decision for President of the United States. Delaware maintained its reputation of being a bell-weather state by once again casting its electoral votes for the successful presidential candidate. The First State has voted for the losing candidates only three times in this century.

The results contained within give a clue as to why Delaware voters reflect National trends with uncanny accuracy. Once again Delaware voters ignored party labels and selected candidates of every political stripe. The parity between Delaware's major political parties produces interesting races with candidates soliciting Delaware's large bloc of un-committed voters. It is heartening to see the keen competition between the political parties. Ultimately Delaware's citizens are the winners in a truly two party state.

There are, however, some ominous signs regarding the health of our political process. Many of our candidates are elected without any opposition. The advantages of incumbency and the demands of candidacy discourage many of our finest citizens from entering the political arena. This occurs despite the active recruitment efforts of the political parties at all levels. For Democracy to work we must provide choices to the people. It is not enough that the parties are on roughly equal footing. All citizens interested in participating in our system of self government must be given encouragement and a fair chance to impact the decisions that affect us. To this end we must dedicate ourselves in the years to come.
